Specialties in Farming.
Under this head the Massachusetts Ploughman has a long article, in which it sets forth the advantage to farmers in studying what particular branch their farms are best adapted to, and urges them to give their attention to some special culture, and not have too many irons in the fire. The concluding portion reads as follows:

"Let us take one or two illustrations. A friend in Fitchburg has two or three acres of Concord grapes. He raises poultry, too, and he had 4,600 eggs from an average of twenty-six hens from the first of January of last year to the last of December; but grapes and small fruits are his special hobby. Year before last, from less than an acre, then in bearing, which he tended himself, he sold very nearly eighteen hundred dollars' worth of grapes. But if he had frittered away his time on forty different crops, and now and then ran to town with a dozen of eggs, or a peck of turnips, or a bushel of peas, or a few ears of green corn, or a string of onions, or a box of butter, or a few other lots of garden truck, it is to be supposed that he would have realized seventeen or eighteen hundred dollars from less than an acre of vineyard."

It is only a few months since we visited that vineyard in company with two or three gentlemen, and on leaving, one of them remarked, "There, I'd rather own that two acres of vineyard, than the best farm in Worcester county." And he was right. Why? Because with less cost of machinery and management, less wear and tear, it would pay a far larger percentage of income than the best farm in Worcester county, and hence, as an investment, as a matter of dollars and cents, it was more desirable.

Again, we know a man in the Connecticut Valley, who bought a place, built a large tobacco shed and made some other improvements, and paid for the whole by the single crop of tobacco the first year. But he gave his mind and attention to it, and didn't try to cultivate much corn or many potatoes.

And again: We know a man in Duxbury, who began to reclaim one of the hardest looking swamp swamps that we ever saw, and set out cranberries, now four or five years ago. The cost per acre of cutting the bushes and the brakes, grubbing up the hassocks, and tending and leveling the surface, carting on sand and setting out the vines, exceeded four hundred dollars. Last year was the third of the experiment and the first crop of any extent, on about an acre then in bearing; the crop yielded between seven and eight hundred dollars net income.

"We have another friend who owns a large cranberry yard in the town of Franklin. It has cost him, on an average, more than five hundred dollars an acre, some of it nearly a thousand dollars an acre to set, because he had everything to contend with. It was an old overgrown swamp, almost inaccessible. He now has about twenty acres in full bearing, and when we were there, a few months ago, he pointed to one meadow of about twelve acres and said, 'There, I am offered twenty thousand dollars for that meadow, not over four hundred acres at the outside.'"

"Why do you take it?"
"I don't know, it pays me the interest on over fifty thousand dollars, and has done for several years. I can't afford to sell it for twenty thousand!"

And at the time of our visit, instead of wishing to sell any part of his extensive plantation, he had three or four workmen in the mud and water half up to their knees, extending the area of his vines, at an enormous cost per acre.

We mention these instances not to recommend every farmer to go or do likewise; that is, to run into grapes or cranberries or tobacco, but simply to show the importance of studying and taking advantage of the natural capacities of the farm.

"A PLEA FOR MEAN MEN."—A correspondent in one of our exchanges, undertakes the defense of "mean men," as close calculators are sometimes called, as follows:

"Who makes the better husband? At the risk of bringing down a torrent of maledictions on my unprotected head, I shall still adhere to the man who is supposed to have no heart or genuine human sentiment. The good fellow for a lover; the mean man for a husband. The latter will rob all creation to supply his household—the former will rob his family to supply his friends. Form all the married women in a solid column up to and down Second street, and I don't get ninety-nine votes out of one hundred in favor of my proposition, I will treat a barrel of gin and water on the occasion of the first election of a female President. Good fellow, all love—mean man, all business. One takes his wife to the opera in a four horse carriage—the other rides triumphantly in a street omnibus. The good fellow never can be kissed to anybody but his wife, for fear of making himself unpopular—the mean man is so sure with the rest of the world that he has not one particle of ill temper to spare at home.

Love rules the court, the camp, the grove, For love is Heaven, and Heaven is love. But it won't buy beef. The mean man seldom gets 'salubrious,' he is too mean. His wife is never jealous. She knows all women hate him, because he is mean, and she rather likes it. She laughs and grows fat. Good fellow drinks—too kind hearted to refuse—and he loves everybody. Good fellow's wife pale and emaciated, and full of sorrow. Mean cuss' wife hale and hearty—fat, red-faced—and weighs a ton. Am I right?"

POULTERER'S FRIEND.
A CERTAIN CURE FOR GAPES AND OTHER DISEASES IN CHICKENS AND TURKEYS.
A Certain Preventive of Chicken Cholera.
Will prevent disease in all kinds of fowl, and promote an increase of fat. Read the following:
Jefferson, Frederick co., Md.,
July 22d, 1867.

Messrs. Clotworthy & Co.:
Gents—The wonderful cures which have been made by your Poultryers' Friend cannot fail to interest all who raise poultry. A gentleman of this village has been experimenting on chickens with the gapes. He tried your Poultryers' Friend, according to the directions, and it had the desired effect in removing the worm, effecting the cure of the disease, and, since then I have had many calls for it, and it has been used extensively with the same result. It is of incalculable value to all who raise poultry.
Respectfully,
A. SPENCER.
